ebrary Launches New eBook Databases for Corporations
New Products to be Showcased at SLA, Booth #862

May 14, 2007 – Palo Alto, CA – To better serve the information needs of corporations, ebrary® (www.ebrary.com), a leading provider of eContent services and technology, today announced the availability of 26 new eBook databases in business, engineering, and technology. The new databases are very granular, allowing busy executives and employees to find and access the authoritative information they need from such publishers as The McGraw-Hill Companies, John Wiley & Sons, AMACOM Books, IBM Redbook, and Springer. All databases are available under a simultaneous, multi-user access model and will continue to grow throughout the subscription term at no additional cost.

“With these new collections, business professionals now have a powerful tool for locating the exact information they require to make important business decisions,” said Kevin Cronin, CEO of Local Knowledge Online, ebrary’s authorized reseller serving the U.S. corporate market. “Additionally, the ebrary platform can be seamlessly integrated with other information resources in the organization and on the web through InfoTools, ebrary’s APIs, and free MARC records, allowing corporations to extend the value of their existing investments.”

In addition to existing databases in Leadership & Management (1,016 titles), Sales & Marketing (753 titles) and execuBooks (325 titles) ebrary now offers the following full-text eBook collections:
